"Postcards I Forgot to Send"

It could almost be considered a passing after thought with Emil searching for something that I didn't catch on our Zoom Call as he was actively mumbling in that scary, Little Joey Buyhim's whisper voice which I took as a sure fire indication of Emil's relapse into that demon, red curry pancake paste freebasing. So, sad!

After further investigation(s) I found out that what he discovered was a rusty tin box, at the bottom of the his old steamer trunk that was labeled in his late uncle Albert's handwriting that stated that enclosed were all postal cards that he had failed to mail on his last, official day trip tour to the Multiverse's Gate Gift Shop.

This alone, with the fact, that Emil's Uncle Albert is a continual, all-time favorite topic and previous editions do hold a sales record over Emil's other editions. Luckily, Emil didn't seem to be clear minded enough to attempt to write an introduction for this issue without his Mystery School of Alexandria mumbo

-jumbo narration of the Multiverse being a complex series of fractal worlds extending to the outer reaches of existence of consensus as we know it while telescoping into a macro series of levels that have yet to be measures. Utter nonsense. No doubt as byproduct of the chemical unbalance created by the red curry pancake paste mixture – especially, since Emil doesn't have proper access to official grade pharmaceutics due to his over usage of our generous, health care package's financial limits. While you might disagree with my observations that Emil's theories seem to be a direct rip-off of the old Superman classic series of him visiting the “Honey, I shrunk the Kids” worlds in what we now understand to be the Multiverse.

Again, say a prayer, light a candle for Emil’s rapid recovery or a further discovery of more of Uncle Albert’s postcards, sketches or doodles.
